"The South 40"

by JAMES A. SMITH
EXTENSION AGENT

Two weeks ago we looked at a sample of suspected SLB corn. After making a field investigation we tentatively diagnosed the condition as a mineral deficiency and most probably magnesium deficiency.

To further determine the cause, a soil sample was taken from the affected area in the field. A lab report confirmed magnesium deficiency and the soil test had a pH of 4.1.

It's interesting to note that this is the lowest soil pH test that we've ever run through this office. It's also the firsttime that I've been able to identify low magnesium in the field. I want to watch this field of corn and observe the corn development in this kind of environment.

I realize that this is just one field of corn out of thousands that were planted this spring. The important thing to remember is that more and more farmers are turning to the use of liquid nitrogen which is acid forming. As nitrogen rates increase the soil pH is dropping faster.

Fifteen years ago the average Appomattox farmer was using 300 pounds of 2-12-12 per acre under corn. This is six pounds of nitrogen. Today the average farmer is using an estimated 70 pounds of nitrogen per acre. The increase has been 12 times in just fifteen years; a tribute to the productiveness of Appomattox farmers.

During this same period lime usage has dropped!! There is a growing need to determine soil pH on a more frequent basis.

One family discovered over the week end that fire will destroy even though it's a day old. Seems that the family had a cookout the night before. The next day, about mid-morning, the charcoal ashes were spread over the straw mulched garden. When the owner returned an hour or so later he found his corn, tomatoes and squash in ruin. What was supposedly dead coals were really alive.

For safety drown the coals before disposing of them.

Southern Leaf Blight has now been identified in eight counties of Virginia. S C L B has been reported on Volunteer, Blends, Tms and Normal corn.

This disease is now reported in 23 states. In Iowa it's been identified in 40 counties. One-half of the counties of Indiana and Illinois report the disease.

Even though wide spread the infection level remains ex - tremely low.

It's Hay Making Time

It's hay making time in Appomattox county, Monroe Dyess is staking the bales as they come from the bailer. The addition of a bale chute saves hours of time needed to pick - up bales once they hit the ground.

Jimmy Bondurant operates one of the new hay making machines that are appearing on a number of Appomattox farms. This machine cuts, conditions and wind rows the forage in one operation. Appomattox farmers using this type of machine are Carroll Mince, Hugh Braford, R. H. Gray, John C. Cole and His Brothers.

Planting Bermuda Grass

There is a place for bermuda grass in the pasture program of Appomattox farmers. Now available with hybrid Vigor, it is a warm season grass which provides grazing from June through September. Marvin and Lewis Hubbard fit the sprigs into a tobacco planter as Jim operates the tractor on the J. P. Alvis farm. Sprigs must be used since this is a hybrid and no seed are formed. Two growers, W. E. McClenny, Jr., Hixburg Community, planted two acres and J. P. Alvis, Hebron Community, planted six acres. In each case the sprigs came from the foundation feed farm at Amelia.

29th Anniversary

May 14th marked the 29th anniversary of the Womens Army Corps. This feminine branch of the United States Army has increased in number over the past 29 years to 14,700 women, thus becoming the largest group of women serving in any of the Armed Forces.

The need for a Corps of trained women to augment the military forces became apparent during the years just prior to W. W. II. Women were first selected to perform duties as clerks, cooks, medics, aviation specialists, motor vehicle operators and so forth, thus freeing men from these jobs to serve in the combat arms. These first women soldiers served in all overseas theaters of operation and earned decorations indicating the high quality of service they gave.
